If Angels are Real

Written by a Bible Believer

Regardless of a person's religious, scientific, or atheistic beliefs, there is an abundance of irrefutable archaeological evidence that simply cannot be explained without considering the possibility of an otherworldly influence.

The evolutionary creation process is often described by the scientific community as a magical roll of the cosmic dice. They use phrases like “luckily for us” to explain it, but even in an infinite universe, such rare coincidental happenstances do not reflect the known laws of physics. The probability of getting lucky so often just isn’t consistent with the overwhelming mathematical odds. If, as most scientists claim, nothing happens by accident, they simply must consider the outside chance of an otherworldly influence.

Scientists often refer to mankind’s surge in intellectual development as the so-called missing link in mankind’s evolutionary chain. The Christian community believes that intelligent design (God) is responsible. Regardless of perspective, a mysterious cosmological stimulus of some sort clearly occurred to cause the rapid increase in the development of humanity’s intellectual and technological abilities. The human brain and mankind are truly unique on Earth and throughout the universe.

The world’s most popular religions, Christianity and Islam, believe their ancient texts to be the true words of their God, and the Hebrew Holy Bible provides us with profound biblical truth. If the Holy Bible is indeed true, angels are undoubtedly real. If so, there are a variety of intriguing factors inherently linked to these genuine celestial beings created by an omnipotent God. These and the Book of Enoch are the only ancient manuscripts that reference the existence of angels. Oddly enough, there are more people who believe in angels than those who believe in the God who supposedly created them.

Our seven years of research on angels led to a clearer understanding of the Bible, which contains a wide variety of tantalizing conclusions about the world’s ancient history and its inevitable future. Angels simply cannot be the product of mythological fables conjured by a group of ignorant ancient ancestors. If they are real, they are much more than a collection of invisible influential spirits. The countless quantity of angels are in fact glorious beings created to serve as God’s divine messengers, and our research indicates they played an active role in God’s intricate creation process. And, according to the Bible, Angels have an innate ability to manifest themselves physically and in many different forms.

If angels are real, they existed long before the so-called Big Bang, which scientists say sparked the creation of our universe "from nothing" and from a point the size of a single atom some 13.8 billion years ago. They were created with advanced technological capabilities, which have undoubtedly been significantly enhanced since the big bang. Unfortunately, due primarily to contemporary theological misperceptions, there is a great deal of confusion surrounding mankind's understanding of these magnificent creatures. Our intent is to provide some biblical and scientific clarification.

Modern man typically conjures images of humanlike winged creatures adorned in glowing robes and sporting mystical halos, but angels are considerably more. "Let US create man in OUR image". Although many may have been created to be humanlike entities, angels were most likely created in a wide variety of different forms. As described in the book of Ezekiel, at least some were designed with a variety of unique animal-like traits. Their exceptional capabilities and immense powers are truly immeasurable. One angel was sent to destroy an entire army of 188 thousand Assyrian soldiers. However, according to Hebrews 13:2, most of us wouldn't recognize an angel (heavenly or fallen) if we encountered one. "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unaware."

God is Returning with ALL His Heavenly Angels

The 20th chapter of Revelation shares a very important detail. When Christ returns to Earth, He doesn't bring some of His angels or a few legions. God returns with ALL His heavenly angels. We note one very significant biblical fact that many religions seem to have overlooked: Since only ONE angel is assigned to bind Satan in chains and imprison him in the bottomless pit, why would Jesus deem it necessary to bring ALL the angels of heaven with Him? The Bible provides us with a profound purposeful reason which makes perfect sense.

If, as our scientific community indicates, our universe is only 13.8 billion years old and astrophysicists have estimated that our universe will exist for at least another two hundred trillion years, the universe is clearly in its infancy. On a cosmological scale, 13.8 billion years is like the blink of God's eye, which implies that eternity is in a very early stage of its development. If so, God would undoubtedly choose a period early in that process to eradicate evil and establish an evil-free cosmos for the balance. Since all the nations on Earth are "dust on His scales", His plan is not just about the salvation of mankind as so many religions believe. While this very brief but essential era of humanity's existence was created to play a key role in God's plan, His primary objective is to cleanse the universe of evil forever.

When Satan was cast out of heaven, which may have been millions or billions of years ago, he and his angels did not simply wander through the universe looking for a place to establish their headquarters. The Bible tells us exactly where Lucifer and one third of God's angels were sent… to Earth, which means that Earth clearly existed prior to their dismissal. We reference Revelation 12:9; "And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him." An even more ironic fact is that out of all the planets in our infinite universe, God chose one tiny spec of cosmic dust in the Milky Way Galaxy to serve as the place where Satan and his angels would wage their war in a futile attempt to overthrow Almighty God.

What the Bible doesn't tell us is when Lucifer and his fallen angels were cast out of heaven. However, since Earth existed before their removal from heaven, we can surmise that they could conceivably have arrived millions or even billions of years ago and long before humanity existed. The Bible is also quite clear about Satan's objectives. Since his goal is to overthrow God, it would have been necessary for his angels to enhance humanity's physical, intellectual, and technological development to ensure that mankind unknowingly served to assist him in achieving that objective. If so, Satan and his army of celestial beings are directly responsible.

Whether the influence of evil on Earth is perceived as satanic or not is considered irrelevant, but even the agnostic community acknowledges the fact that evil is present in our world. The impact of evil has undoubtedly had a profoundly negative and rather devastating effect on humanity, and there is nothing humanity can do to fix it. The only genuine means of resolve is for God to eradicate evil entirely and, according to the Bible, that is His plan.

The Relevance of Irrelevance

Nothing written in the Bible should be ignored, but there are biblical scriptures that deserve more attention than others, and some that deserve less. The creation process in Genesis, which is outlined in a few short pages, is often interpreted literally to mean six twenty-four hour days. Genesis 2:4 states that these were the "generations" (or history) of God's creation process, which implies that it involved an undefined generational period.

As referenced in Genesis 1:14, God didn't create the sun, moon, and stars until Day 4. If so, a twenty-four hour day did not exist on days one, two, and three. Even if a person's understanding of the creation process is based solely on a literal interpretation of a few brief passages in Genesis, the creation process described simply wouldn't make any sense. In our view, and more importantly, whether God created the heavens and the earth in six twenty-four hour days or over a period of billions of years is irrelevant. Because mankind couldn't possibly fathom the methods or instruments God may have used to create our world or how long the process may have taken, we consider the biblical reference irrelevant. It's not important enough to warrant an ongoing debate.

The Holy Bible contains sixty-six rather lengthy books. So, we believe the six-day creation process outlined in Genesis should perhaps be perceived as a biblical footnote. If the details concerning God's creation process were considered important, the Bible would most certainly have elaborated on the topic. Since it doesn't, the process outlined in Genesis should probably be given as much attention by the Church as the Bible gave it reference.

Debating such trivial issues with our friends in the scientific community serves no genuine purpose whatsoever and has a detrimental effect on the evangelistic mission of the Church. Believers should instead focus on the many biblical facts that are considered relevant, like those concerning the influence and teaching of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. We realize that many of today's technological discoveries may challenge how some perceive traditional theological beliefs. Some aspects of science simply do not fit very well into the parameters of traditional religious ideology, but the knowledge and wisdom that science extends to all of humanity cannot be dismissed or ignored by the Church.

Science and the Church

There are natural history museums throughout the world that contain a vast array of dinosaur fossils, which serves as indisputable scientific evidence of their existence hundreds of millions of years ago. However, because dinosaurs aren't mentioned in the Bible, their existence doesn't fit into the 6-day creation process depicted in Genesis. Many in the Christian community adamantly refuse to acknowledge the abundance of archaeological, paleontological, and anthropological evidence and contend the existence of dinosaurs contradicts the Bible. Since very few specific details regarding God's creation process are provided in biblical scripture, many believe that God's Spoken Words were the only instruments He used to create the universe and everything in it. But when we consider all the enlightening biblical evidence and incorporate factual scientific discoveries as well, God's creation process takes on new meaning.

Science doesn't contradict the Bible at all. It in fact serves to support it. If, as scientists claim, an asteroid crashed into the planet to cause the extinction of dinosaurs sixty-five million years ago, Earth would undoubtedly have become void and without form as depicted in Genesis. Darkness would have covered the face of the deep. And, since the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, the oceans already existed before God's creation process began. Our views may differ from traditional theological beliefs, but the incorporation of science lends vital support to biblical understanding.

We were reminded that for thousands of years and prior to Galileo's astronomical discoveries in the 17th century, the Church adamantly believed that Earth was the center of the universe and the heavens revolved around our planet. Those who believed or taught otherwise were considered blasphemers and were either imprisoned or put to death. The Church, however, was eventually compelled to acknowledge the scientific evidence and incorporate such facts into its theology.

The secular community is more inclined to consider factual science and, because religious beliefs are primarily faith-based, such theological viewpoints are typically perceived as mythological fable. Since most scientific discoveries are being applied to nearly every aspect of our lives, the Christian community shouldn't hastily dismiss select aspects because they don't fit into traditional theological views. Although we are inclined to consider the literal interpretations of a few brief pages in Genesis irrelevant, many theologians and biblical scholars still adamantly insist that God spoke everything into existence in six twenty-four-hour days.

While we respectfully acknowledge the fact that an omnipotent God with unlimited powers could certainly have spoken all of creation into existence on command, biblical scripture seems to indicate that He most likely utilized advanced technology far beyond mankind's comprehension. Therefore, to develop a clearer understanding of the Bible, the Church should also consider all valid contemporary scientific facts.

As the Bible assures us, God's ways are much different and exceedingly greater than mankind's. Since humanity can't possibly comprehend God's technological capabilities, our understanding of His creation process is considered irrelevant. How He created our world and how long it took doesn't really matter and it certainly isn't worthy of an ongoing debate. Science and the Bible truly serve to complement each other.

Adam and Eve

The Hebrew civilization, which chronologically dates to approximately 4000 BC, provides us with a detailed accounting of the Israelite's history. While the Bible may reference other regions or civilizations as well, the book was not intended to serve as a historical record of the entire world. The known world of God's chosen people in antiquity most likely only consisted of a topographical territory equivalent to a one thousand mile radius or so. Without modern technology, it would have been virtually impossible for the Israelites to have known that other continents like North America even existed. Since their view of the world (Earth) was so limited, it is certainly possible that the great biblical flood destroyed all life in a vast but immediate geographical region, which they recognized as Earth.

When God created Adam, He breathed into his nostrils "the Breath of Life", which many interpret to mean He breathed life into him. However, since aside from a brief passage in Job, "the Breath of Life" only appears twice in the entire Bible, we are inclined to believe that the phrase has a substantially greater meaning. There must be a profound reason why "the Breath of Life" is only mentioned in the following biblical scriptures:

1) Genesis 2:7: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."
2) Genesis 7:22 - Noah's flood: "All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died."
3) * Job 27:3: "...the spirit of God is in my nostrils,"

Since the Bible doesn't reflect any other use of the peculiar phrase or expound on its intended meaning, the Church cannot simply assume that the original translation was intended to imply that after God breathed the breath of life into Adam, he and all mankind thereafter became living "beings". The phrase clearly has a distinct reference to the man and bloodline that God created from the clay of the Earth. Since most of life on Earth was created prior to Day six and before the creation of Adam, we note that it apparently wasn't necessary for God to breathe a "breath of life" into any other earthly creature He created. Since there is no indication that He breathed a breath into Lucifer or any other angel, we believe the "the Breath of Life" must have been referencing something considerably more significant than life itself.

In accordance with Genesis 1:26-31 and before the creation of Adam, a variety of other human beings (male and female created He them) already existed. For that reason, we don't believe that Adam and Eve were the first human beings on the planet. After Cain killed his brother and was banished from Eden, we are told that he took a wife from the land of Nod east of Eden. Therefore, since the inimitable phrase is only used when God created Adam, it appears to be referencing a very significant moment when the "breath" of God, which was most likely the Spirit of God, was delivered to establish the exclusive spiritual bloodline of Adam and Eve's descendants, God's Chosen People. Since there are so many ancient archaeological sites that have been dated to 9000 BC and earlier, other civilizations apparently existed prior to 4000 BC. If so, all human life on Earth simply could not have been the descendants of Adam and Eve, and the Hebrew civilization was not a secondhand product of natural evolution.

To further clarify, it is important to note the biblical reference to "God's Chosen People," which indicates that God chose (selected) one civilization. If there were no other human beings on the planet prior to the creation of Adam and Eve, there would have been no reason for God to have designated the Israelites His "Chosen People". From a chronological perspective, 4000 BC simply wouldn't have provided enough time for all of humanity to have genetically evolved into so many diverse cultures in so many different regions.

If all human beings on Earth were the descendants of Adam and Eve, the many enemies the Israelites encountered and conquered throughout antiquity would in fact have been their relatives. For the Church to presume that Adam and Eve were the first human beings on the planet makes no sense whatsoever and, as we understand it, that is not what the Bible tells us. With God, of course, all things are possible. So, it is conceivable that Adam and Eve populated the entire planet, but the probability that Adam was the first human being on the planet is highly unlikely. Genesis 1:27 tells us, "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." This passage seems to indicate that God created male and female human beings prior to His creation of Adam and Eve. If so, a wide variety of human beings most likely coexisted around the world Earth.

Anthropological evidence suggests that humanity evolved over millions of years and by means of natural evolution. That could explain how so many variations of humanity may have established a presence before the creation of Adam. Since Satan clearly had untethered access to the Garden of Eden, it is a biblical fact that evil already existed on Earth. And, since ours is an all-knowing God, that could not possibly have been an oversight. In addition, there would have been no reason for God to place the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil in Eden unless He already knew the inevitable outcome.

Many have been led to believe that the serpent depicted in the Garden of Eden was a talking snake. While we certainly wouldn't dismiss the possibility, we consider it highly unlikely. The contemporary image of a serpent was generated by 13th century theologists who perceived the term to mean a snakelike or reptilian entity, but the terms "serpent" and "dragon" are referenced throughout the Bible and are often used to describe Satan. The Bible also identifies the serpent who deceived Eve as the devil himself. He is, in fact, the same serpent who tempted Jesus.

An angelic being who had the power to tempt Jesus by offering Him the entire world most certainly would not have appeared in the form of a disgusting reptilian-type creature. Satan undoubtedly appeared to Jesus as a spectacular celestial creature and most likely portrayed himself as a fabulous angel of light, which served to enhance his deceptively convincing temptation. We have surmised that Satan most likely appeared to Eve as a magnificent angel of light as well, not as a talking Anaconda. These facts support our contention that Satan's angels are so much more than invisible demonic spirits. If so, the Church must consider updating its perception of heavenly angels, fallen angels, and the devil himself.

Regardless of Satan's physical stature in the Garden, it is highly unlikely that anyone, much less Eve who communed with God, might have been persuaded by a snake with an unusual ability to speak. In Revelation 20:2, the term "old serpent" and "great dragon" directly links the satanic figure to the serpent who tempted Eve in Genesis 3. Biblical scripture also defines Satan as a deceiver of the whole world, devourer, and adversary of humanity and God. It's not impossible and we wouldn't dismiss the possibility, but the likelihood of Satan portraying himself as a snake or reptilian creature is not consistent with genuine biblical scripture. In our view, the Church shouldn't waste valuable time and resources debating theories like evolution and/or whether the serpent who tempted Eve was a snake. Such details are in fact irrelevant.

Since the faith-based biblical creation process can't be proven, perhaps the Church should consider recognizing the brief biblical reference in Genesis to be somewhat irrelevant. It's not until biblical scripture is considered in conjunction with contemporary science that a better understanding of our omnipotent God can truly be achieved. Many scientific theories, most of which hastily exclude the consideration of intelligent design, typically result in inexplicable singularities. Unless science and the Bible are considered in conjunction with each other, both are destined to remain unexplained mysteries. And, if angels are real, they must be considered from an infinite astronomical perspective as well.

Forty and Forty

Many Christians believe that after departing Egypt the Israelites wandered through the desert for FORTY years, that Moses was on the Mount Sinai for FORTY days and FORTY nights, that it rained for FORTY days and FORTY nights to generate Noah's flood, and that Jesus was tempted by Satan for FORTY days and FORTY nights. No one in antiquity had a wristwatch and very few even had a calendar. We are therefore convinced that the number was used to reference and symbolically express an extensive period of unknown or undefined time. For the Israelites in ancient times, FORTY simply meant A LONG TIME.

Examples of the Bible's use of the symbolic version of FORTY and FORTY:

- When God destroyed the earth with a flood, He caused it to rain for 40 days and 40 nights (a long time) (Genesis 7:12).
- After Moses killed the Egyptian, he fled to Midian, where he spent 40 years (a long time) in the desert tending flocks (Acts 7:30).
- Moses was on Mount Sinai for 40 days and 40 nights (a long time) (Exodus 24:18).
- Moses interceded on Israel's behalf for 40 days and 40 nights (a long time) (Deuteronomy 9:18, 25).
- The Israelite spies took 40 days (a long time) to spy out Canaan (Numbers 13:25).
- The Israelites wandered through the desert for 40 years (a long time) (Deuteronomy 8:2-5).
- Before Samson's deliverance, Israel served the Philistines for 40 years (a long time) (Judges 13:1).
- Goliath taunted Saul's army for 40 days (a long time) before David arrived to slay him (1 Samuel 17:16).
- When Elijah fled from Jezebel, he traveled 40 days and 40 nights (a long time) to Mt. Horeb (1 Kings 19:8).
- The number 40 also appears in the prophecies of Ezekiel (4:6; 29:11-13) and Jonah (3:4).
- Jesus was tempted for 40 days and 40 nights (a long time) (Matthew 4:2).
- There were 40 days (a long time) between Jesus' resurrection and ascension (Acts 1:3).

The number is often used to reference periods of biblical tribulation, but since the ancient Hebrew civilization only had a vocabulary of about 7,000 words, a word to describe some events or certain occurrences probably didn't exist in ancient times. The Israelites didn't have a written language and the Gezer Calendar only dated to 10 BC. So, their version of a monthly or annual calendar was for the most part limited to the use of a sundial.

When the Israelites fled Egypt, they had no way of knowing how long their trek through the desert would last. They most likely expected to reach the Promise Land in a relatively short period of time. So, it is doubtful that God's Chosen People anticipated a timeframe measured in terms of years. Even if someone was assigned the responsibility of keeping track of the time spent wandering through the desert, they most likely recorded each day on ancient scrolls made of animal skin parchment that on a quest through the desert would have been considered a precious commodity.

After a few years of daily recordkeeping, the faith of the Israelites was most likely beginning to dwindle. After ten years, the supply of parchment used to record the quantity of days probably ran low as well. So, at some point, even an earnest attempt to maintain an accurate accounting of the quantity of years likely reached a surrendering peak. After twenty years, it was probably doubtful that the Israelites would ever reach their destination. By then, the recordkeepers were probably asking themselves, "what's the point?" While they had a vague idea how long their trek was, they most likely chose to use the symbolic term "FORTY" to express it as an approximate number of years. They may have wandered the desert for a period of thirty to fifty years, but the actual timeframe is irrelevant. Clearly, this specific period of tribulation lasted a very long time.

The same philosophy would likely have applied to Noah and his family while they were in the Ark. God told Noah it would rain for forty days and forty nights and the Bible tells us that it rained for forty days and forty nights. After the rain stopped, the Ark remained afloat for an additional forty days. It is relatively safe to assume that Noah and his small family were toiling non-stop every day just to keep up with feeding the enormous collection of animals and they also had to clean up after them. So, it is doubtful they sacrificed much if any time keeping track of the precise number of days that had passed. Although they probably had a rough idea, recordkeeping wasn't at the top of their priority list. Since they probably didn't know exactly how many days they spent on the Ark, they most likely used the same number God had referenced when He instructed Noah to build it. The actual number of days, whether it was less than forty or considerably more, is considered irrelevant. What the Bible was conveying to us is the fact that torrential rains persisted for a very long time.

When Jesus went off to pray in the Judean wilderness, He was supposedly gone for forty days and forty nights. Since it wasn't at all unusual for Jesus to go off on His own to pray, His disciples were probably expecting him to return soon, perhaps in a day or two. It is highly unlikely that anyone noted the actual time or day Jesus left and it is doubtful that anyone elected to track of the actual number of days He was gone. After several days, His disciples were most likely beginning to question how long He had been gone and, after thirty days, they were probably wondering if Jesus would return at all. Again, the actual number of days that Jesus spent in meditative prayer is considered irrelevant, but it was most likely more than thirty to fifty days. Since His disciples didn't know exactly how long He had been gone, they probably used the symbolic term to indicate that He had been gone for a very long time.

The symbolic term was not intended to be perceived as literal and, although the reference did not apply to a chronological age, the term was often used to express an approximate but lengthy time frame. We of course consider the meaningless detail irrelevant, but there is one unusual fact about the number deemed interesting enough to note. For what it's worth, at least in the English language, FORTY is the only word form of a number where all its letters appear in alphabetical order. If there is some sort of underlying revelation in the use of the term, we aren't aware of what it might be.

Ancient Astronaut Theory

We like to extend credit where credit is due, but those who believe that the ancient astronaut conjectures are valid are watching a different TV program than we are. While we admire their tenacity and consider the subject matter interesting, we adamantly disagree with the views this unique community conveys. It is, however, important to note that since tens of millions of people believe that their theoretical notions are legitimate, ancient astronaut theory may be worthy of modest acknowledgment. While the views presented on the Ancient Aliens TV program may generate profound intrigue, the show merely offers a wide variety of speculative claims to support their unproven theories and that's just not enough evidence to convince us.

Erich von Däniken's controversial book, "Chariots of the Gods," invites us to consider some rather perplexing questions concerning many of the world's ancient archaeological mysteries. Although the book is based upon a wide range of speculative theories as well, we at least admire his approach. He posed the question; how did our technically challenged ancient ancestors thousands of years ago manage to construct so many incredible monolithic structures? He not only enticed the world to consider how but why so many of the world's magnificent ancient structures were built of multi-ton stones in some of the most remote locations on the planet and before the invention of the wheel. The peculiar conclusion he reached was that aliens from planets elsewhere in the universe must be responsible. His book sparked the beginning of a community that came to be known as ancient astronaut theorists. While it is inconsistent with standard scientific procedures, the notion of alien influence is also considered by many in the scientific community to be a viable theory.

Our research considers much of the same evidence, but we humbly disagree with their conclusions. Angel enthusiasts do, however, agree with the philosophical notion that an unworldly influence "who from the heavens came" played a fundamental role in mankind's rapid technological development. However, based primarily on the probability of mathematical odds, we consider it highly unlikely that technologically advanced aliens from another planet traveled hundreds or thousands of light years through the universe to clandestinely influence life on our miniscule planet. If there is any chance, as slight as it may be, we would not hastily dismiss the possibility.

The theoretical notion of angelic influence not only offers a logical explanation for humanity's monumental achievements in antiquity but also a practical biblically supported elucidation as well. Like any other hypothetical theory, the views expressed herein cannot be scientifically verified, but the prospect of angelic influence makes more sense than any other theory proposed by astrophysicists, mainstream archaeologists, and ancient astronaut theorists.

We note that, on a cosmological scale, Earth is merely an infinitesimal fragment of cosmological dust in one of hundreds of trillions of solar systems in an infinite universe. While Ancient astronaut theorists offer some intriguing thoughts, they offer no logical reason whatsoever why an advanced extraterrestrial civilization would invest the time and valuable resources required to influence life on our planet. They contend that extraterrestrial beings were perceived by our ignorant ancestors to be angels or gods, but our ancient ancestors were far from ignorant. The angels depicted in the Holy Bible certainly weren't perceived as alien beings pretending to be gods. They were recognized as very real celestial entities. When an Israelite encountered a heavenly angel, the initial inclination was to bow to the supreme angelic being, but on almost every occasion, the angel would quickly clarify that only God is worthy of such praise.

As the legends of so many civilizations indicate, their ancient ancestors were said to have come from the stars. Since Satan and his angels did in fact come "from the stars" (the heavens), the contentions expressed herein are in essence consistent with such legends. Ancient civilizations who encountered Satan's fallen angels would undoubtedly have perceived them as a godlike creature. From a biblical perspective, because Satan and his angels are notorious for their deceptive practices, it is safe to assume they did not reveal their actual identity. In ancient times, Satan's angels expected to be and probably were perceived as gods.

An alien visitor from another planet would most likely be perceived as a god as well. So, we certainly wouldn't dismiss the speculative notions proposed by ancient astronaut theorists, but the many "what-if" questions posed on the Ancient Aliens TV program are clearly limited to creative hypothetical thoughts. Anyone with a vivid imagination can generate a long list of unanswerable questions and suggest a variety of intriguing answers, but their suppositional conclusions are nothing more than shallow and rather hollow ideas.

Our research, which seeks to answer many of the same questions, incorporates many of the same scientific principles. What sets our theory apart is that our conjectures are supported by genuine biblical scripture. We contend that angels, not aliens, are most likely responsible for the extraordinary achievements of so many ancient civilizations. Even though our views offer a tangible explanation, many will consider our theories to be a far-fetched notion and dismiss them as mythology. Our theories are not intended to be perceived as absolute facts, but we assert that the ancient angel concept is as viable as any other theory proposed and certainly deserves comparable consideration.

Organizations like SETI (Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence) have invested heavily for decades in extensive searches throughout our universe. To date, they have failed to discover ANY other earthlike planets, much less intelligent life, which serves to confirm that Earth is truly unique. We acknowledge the mathematical odds which indicate numerous worlds with intelligent life most likely exist within the confines of our galaxy, but we certainly haven't found any. Life may very well exist elsewhere in our infinite universe, but Earth is the only life-sustaining planet we know of, and our solar system is apparently one of a kind as well. Regardless of a person's beliefs and as challenging as life may be at times, Earth and humanity are experiencing an extremely rare cosmological opportunity.

UFOs… Evidence of Aliens or Angelic Activity?

UFOs (Unidentified Flying Objects), UAPs (Unidentified Aerial Phenomenon), and USOs (Unidentified Submersible Objects). Today, it is no longer a question of "Do they exist?" We know for a fact they exist because governmental agencies have released video evidence and are actively researching the phenomena. Since our most technologically advanced scientists haven't been able to explain it, the topic has sparked a controversial international debate. The world's growing fascination with UFOs prompted additional angelic research.

An abundance of sightings have been documented by well-respected military personnel for decades and the U.S. Congress is actively investigating the phenomenon. These peculiar aircraft are demonstrating maneuvers that supersede the known laws of physics and capabilities of any superpower on Earth. For good reason, UFOs are considered by most countries to be a potential threat to national security, but top-secret research projects and black op programs may be responsible.

Recently declassified documentation that dates to the 1940s confirms that the United States was clandestinely developing top-secret fighter jets and spy planes at the infamous Area 51 facility in Groom Lake, Nevada. Public sightings of an experimental aircraft would undoubtedly be perceived as and subsequently labeled a UFO. Since the public will of course never be informed about the top-secret technology being developed by today's world governments, it is relatively safe to assume that at least some of the strange activity in our skies can probably be attributed to the testing of experimental aircraft. But it is important to keep an open mind to all the possibilities.

If some of these UAPs are in fact operated or controlled by an unknown or otherworldly entity, it is necessary to explore who or what may be responsible. One rather popular theory is that aliens from other planets are responsible. Aliens could conceivably account for some of the peculiar activity, but another valid consideration is angelic activity.

We suggest that it would be imperative for Satan's angels to monitor the facilities housing every military weapon on Earth, which would explain why so much UFO activity seems to be centered around military installations. It is important to note that no one on Earth knows how angels travel or just how extensive their technological capabilities truly are. To dismiss the possibility that angels may utilize advanced forms of antigravity aircraft to travel through the cosmos and conduct their earthly surveillance would be irresponsible. We realize that many will be inclined to repudiate the notion, but there is substantial biblical evidence that supports the likelihood. For those who believe what the Bible teaches, the activity of angels isn't such a far-fetched notion to consider.

UFOs have apparently been witnessed throughout human history. Although no genuine evidence exists to substantiate the theory, many scientists support the theory that alien civilizations from elsewhere in the universe have been targeting our planet for thousands of years. Since no one knows who or what aliens are and where they are from, we are compelled to ask, "Why would they come to Earth?"

Why would alien civilizations traverse hundreds, thousands, or millions of light years (about six trillion miles per light year) to covertly observe or influence humanity? Assuming other worlds in the universe are aware of God's plan, they would presumably be motivated to monitor the effects and impact of evil. They would also want to be on hand to witness God's glorious second coming, His first and only appearance to eradicate evil

Statistically, those who believe in God account for approximately 60% of the global population. Due to a distinct lack of understanding, which can be somewhat difficult to comprehend, we can understand the reluctance of some to consider the possibility of angelic activity. Ironically, most of the world, even those who don't believe in God or a universe created by design, believe in angels. So, if angels are real, UAP activity could conceivably be due to the ongoing endeavors of technologically advanced angels. Even our most elite in the scientific community can't explain how UAPs with no wings or visible means of propulsion manage to maneuver in ways that defy the known laws of physics. Even if our angelic approach is only perceived as a remote possibility, the theory is certainly worthy of consideration. Bottom line: Whether it is due to angels, aliens, or experimental aircraft, there is clearly enough UAP evidence to warrant the growing concerns of the world's military and political leaders.

Scientists who contend that our infinite universe somehow sparked into existence "from nothing" have only begun to comprehend its limitless complexities. They will arrogantly entertain unprovable speculative notions such as wormholes, multiple universes, and curvatures in spacetime while brazenly shunning the prospect of intelligent design. Until science can produce indisputable evidence of such anomalies, the community must remain open to all possibilities. While science adamantly dismisses the prospect of intelligent design, the angelic theory is as valid as any other theoretical notion presented to date.

The same mathematical principles that scientists use to verify most theoretical conjectures and to refute biblical beliefs are also ironically applied to support the proposition that alien civilizations are responsible for UAP activity. We certainly wouldn't dismiss the unlikely notion, but the probability that aliens from another world might be responsible is considered a remote possibility. Atheists who rely on the scientific community for edification and many Christians consider angels a far-fetched notion and aliens a valid consideration. Governmental agencies worldwide are investing billions of dollars each year in studying these unusual phenomena. If science somehow manages to prove that UFO activity is in fact due to alien beings, it will undoubtedly add an intellectual feather to their agnostic cap. But if there is any chance that UFOs are indeed the result of angelic activity, the haphazard negligence of our scientific community could in essence be jeopardizing humanity's future. Until the source of such anomalies can be identified and verified, no possibility should be dismissed.

The Bible states that God will soon be returning to Earth soon and with all His heavenly angels. Ironically, ancient astronaut theorists contend that aliens from our ancient past are expected to return someday as well. If the ill-conceived notion regarding alien civilizations proves to be a fact, bible believers are prepared to face the foreseeable consequences. But even if the scientific community turns out to be right, those who chose to follow Christ will have lost nothing. Since atheists seem to find a great deal of satisfaction in proving bible believers wrong, they'll get to say, "I told you so."

In retrospect, however, if the scientific community and ancient astronaut theorists turn out to be wrong, they will be forced to face a day of devout reckoning. If angels are indeed real, whether they are responsible for the peculiar UFO activity or not, their presence and purpose will be made known when Christ returns. It will, unfortunately, be too late for non-believers who won't have an opportunity to change their minds. So, if it is in fact God and not extraterrestrial beings who returns, the world will be in for a rather astute awakening. The knees of every human being will eventually bow to Jesus Christ and confess that He is Lord of the universe. If angels are real, TV programs like Ancient Aliens will have inadvertently served to deceive millions of misguided followers. Because the choice made today is so important, we encourage everyone to keep an open mind to all the fascinating possibilities.

The Holy Bible references numerous encounters with angels, both heavenly and the fallen. It also expounds on the intricate role that angels played in ancient times. To state that God and His innumerable angels are simply the products of fictional mythology or religious gibberish could prove to be the most monumental oversight in human history. Mankind must either choose to follow Christ or to live their brief menial lives according to personal preference and with no regard for their fellow man. The Body of Christ may or may not make a lot of money and enjoy a lavish lifestyle, but if God and angels truly exist, there will be a significant price to pay if the wrong choice is made.

The Global Population

Mankind, the so-called stewards of our planet, has made far too many mistakes that have attributed to the significant decline in Earth's atmospheric conditions and the contamination of our landscapes. However, citing as evidence the Ice Age some twelve thousand years ago, the effects of mankind's influence is NOT solely responsible for the global warming our planet is currently experiencing. Even a modest change in Earth's orbit around the sun or a minor adjustment to the angle of Earth's axis may have, and most likely has, played a role in creating the devastating effects of global warming. But no one seems to be considering Earth's rapidly growing population, which is clearly having a significant impact on our society.

In 10,000 BC, the population on our planet was estimated to be between one and ten million. By 1 AD, the population had only increased to three hundred million or so. In 1650 it was still less than five hundred million, but by 1804, less than two hundred years, the global population had reached the one billion milestone. By 1974, the population reached the 4 billion mark and today it exceeds 8 billion. It is important to note that modern science has determined Earth only has enough natural resources to properly sustain a global population of approximately 10 billion people. Since the world's fast growing populace is expected to exceed 10.3 billion by 2080, many of its rapidly depleting resources will soon be exhausted. Although no government seems to be addressing the issues, overpopulation poses a significant problem.

Since our oceans can only reproduce so many fish, the planet can only grow so many trees, farmers can only grow so much food, ranchers can only supply so many animals, only the wealthiest people on the planet, the top ten percent, will be able to afford Earth's declining luxuries. Due to the rapidly rising cost of most resources, most will no longer be able to enjoy many of life's precious delicacies, which were once considered readily available. Since A.I. is rapidly eliminating the need for a human workforce, the entire job market is dwindling accordingly. Wages are no longer increasing in harmony with rate of inflation. So, five times as many people are competing for each available job, which outlines a recipe for disaster. The only way for the elite to deal with such scenarios is to significantly reduce the global population.

Aside from a natural calamitous event, the only way for humanity to protect those valuable resources would be to eliminate a large portion of the less-desirable population. The quickest and easiest way to accomplish that objective is via cataclysmic warfare. The atomic bomb that was dropped on Hiroshima demonstrated those capabilities, but just one of today's nuclear warheads can instantly eliminate all life in a major metropolitan city. We pray that the superpowers will refrain from such tactics, but a nuclear war is a very real never-ending threat if such an event was to take place, not even the world's wealthiest would be immune from the inevitable impact and foreseeable ramifications.

Satan Has One (And Only One) Objective

Satan's quest is clearly outlined in biblical scripture. Albeit futile, his sole intent is to overthrow God and assume His universal thrown. Mankind can only imagine what God's kingdom might consist of or what heaven may be like, but Satan knows firsthand and he plans to be the new CEO. The Bible tells us that God alone reigns over the entire universe, which of course includes Earth. Although He certainly can and usually does supersede in our world, Earth is clearly ruled by Satan. Anyone who isn't clear about Satan's endeavor and God's plan for evil are encouraged to explore the many biblical excerpts that verify the fact.

As Isaiah 14:12-14 tells us, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north. I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most high."

The Bible also states In Revelation 12:9, "And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him."

It is important to note that, out of all the planets, in all the solar systems, in all the galaxies of God's infinite universe, Lucifer and one third of God's heavenly angels were sent to Earth. So, our planet designated to play a key role in God's ultimate plan. From mankind's perspective, thousands, millions, or billions of years may seem like a very long time, but on an infinite cosmological scale, even 100 billion years is considered miniscule. So, the brief window of opportunity extended to Satan is merely a fleeting moment in infinite time. Since the Bible doesn't expound on the details, the actual timeframe is unknown and therefore considered irrelevant.

Satan has clearly been using his brief interval of time on Earth to establish the foundation for an ongoing catch-twenty-two scenario. The ability of every nation to keep up with or surpass the military technology of its enemies is essential to maintaining global peace. A level military playing field is crucial to detour a thermonuclear strike by an adversary. The potential for total annihilation of all life on our planet has, at least so far, been thwarted by the fact that a first strike by any country would inevitably lead to the annihilation of their own civilization. For reasons of national security, since the latest and greatest advanced weapons of mass destruction exist behind the walls of today's superpowers, most of humanity is left to imagine the actual military capabilities that today's global forces truly possess.

We contend that the catch twenty-two scenario facing humanity today was not an incidental outcome created by man. If angels are real, Satan and his angels are most likely responsible for the advancements in technology developed by warring kingdoms in ancient times and the catastrophic weaponry being developed today. To wage his war against God, it will be necessary for all the advanced weaponry in existence to be at Satan's disposal. The extent of military technology that exists today is of course unknown, but it is safe to assume that Satan undoubtedly has absolute control of all the weapons in every country's arsenal.

We are utterly amazed by the number of people who emphatically declare that a nuclear war will never take place because it would most likely result in self-annihilation. Since mankind has never developed a weapon that it hasn't utilized, the use of such catastrophic weapons is inevitable. The world has come dangerously close to initiating World War III on several occasions. Whether a person chooses to believe it or not, an advanced weapon war will at some point in the future undoubtedly take place. Perhaps Albert Einstein said it best, "I know not with what weapons World War III will be fought, but World War IV will be fought with sticks and stones".

Today's nuclear warheads are eighty times more powerful than the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima, and one missile can deliver multiple warheads anywhere in the world within a matter of minutes and simultaneously destroy several major cities. In mankind's view, such capabilities may seem like excessive overkill, but there is a profound biblical reason why there are enough nuclear weapons in existence to destroy the world hundreds of times over. If angels are real and Satan is indeed responsible, it is doubtful that these weapons were intended for mankind to use against its fellow man. When the time arrives for him to wage his war against God, which we believe could be in the very near future, Satan will undoubtedly utilize every military weapon on Earth.

To set the stage for his quest in antiquity, Satan most likely appointed a select group of fallen angels to physically reign as godlike kings on Earth. If so, many of our ancient civilizations were likely ruled by demonic angels posing as gods to establish the regional environments for warring nations. The influence of evil is most likely the reason so many civilizations sought to conquer and plunder their neighboring communities. Clearly, the world's superpowers are still competing to achieve global dominance. History and legends tell us that those who ruled over many of our ancient civilizations were perceived as gods. Whether those ancient kings were Satan's angels posing as gods or ordinary human beings that somehow managed to achieve a godlike stature, a wide variety of power-oriented rulers began a perpetual never-ending series of conquests.

The Bible tells us that when Jesus Christ makes His glorious return, Satan will be bound in chains by one angel, and that he'll be cast into the bottomless abyss. At the conclusion of God's millennial reign on Earth, Satan will be released from his prison. He will then rally all his angels and those from the second resurrection to wage his war against God. Despite the magnitude, his army won't be remotely large enough, but Satan will unleash every weapon on Earth in his attempt to overthrow God. According to the Bible, Satan will be promptly defeated, probably in the shortest battle in cosmological history, and every form of evil will cease to exist for the balance of eternity.

If, as we suggest, Satan's fallen angels had deceptively established an earthly presence and were in fact posing as ancient godlike rulers, they would undoubtedly have possessed extraordinary powers and an assortment of astonishing capabilities. Angels with advanced technological capabilities could easily have commissioned and overseen the construction of monumental megalithic structures like the pyramids of Egypt. Because Satan's angels were manifest as earthly humanlike beings, they were apparently forbidden from living forever as an earthly god, but the select group was extended an extremely rare opportunity to thrive on Earth as godlike kings.

There is plenty of archaeological evidence to support the fact that ordinary human beings in ancient times achieved the status of king and it is a historical fact that men and women in a variety of remote civilizations throughout the world did so. But how so many of our ancient ancestors managed to achieve a godlike status and accomplish such extraordinary feats of engineering simply cannot be explained. Based on our research, it is doubtful that an ordinary human being could have achieved the godlike stature of an Egyptian Pharoh, but if angels are real, it would have been relatively easy for a demonic angel posing as a human god.

According to the Bible, Satan's angels were already destined for eventual elimination when they were originally cast out of heaven. Therefore, because they had virtually nothing to lose, they were forced to comply with all of Satan's directives. As historical records indicate, these ancient godlike rulers experienced the most extensive form of earthly luxuries known to man. So, an opportunity for Satan's angels to live as gods on Earth would undoubtedly have provided an enticing incentive. The prospect of angelic influence offers a biblically supported rational explanation for how and why so many ancient rulers managed to establish their elite stature and reign as gods over their civilizations. If it was Satan's angels, they would in essence be competing with other angels to expand their kingdoms by conquering the civilizations ruled by other fallen angels. The angels who develop the most advanced military technology and achieve the greatest conquests secure the highest positions in Satan's eternal kingdom if he somehow manages to overthrow God.

Contemporary archaeologists and mainstream historians cannot offer a logical explanation for how so many of our ancient ancestors managed to achieve their prestigious and godlike stature. They have no explanation for how so many ancient monumental stone temples and tombs were miraculously and simultaneously constructed throughout the world. It is believed that many of those structures were erected to honor or intomb these so-called gods and were geared to deliver them into their version of a godlike afterlife. We, however, cannot envision any scenario that explains why an entire civilization would agree to comply with such Incomprehensible decrees. Unless these ancient rulers possessed some sort of godlike powers, it is highly unlikely that ordinary human beings could have been inspired or persuaded to invest the efforts and resources necessary to accommodate their unusual decrees.

If two or three ancient civilizations managed to come up with very similar ideas at the same time, it would be considered an extremely rare coincidence. But we are considering thousands of civilizations and megalithic structures. The mathematical odds indicate that the correlation simply cannot be attributed to an extraordinary coincidence. Unless our ancient ancestors were in fact guided by angels, or perhaps aliens, the unlikely notion offers no logic or rationale whatsoever.

We respectfully acknowledge the possibility that extraterrestrial beings with advanced technological capabilities could conceivably have influenced mankind, but such a speculative notion isn't even remotely consistent with biblical scripture. Although we perceive it as highly unlikely, many scientists believe theories about extraterrestrial influence are worthy of consideration. Although angels with supreme powers offers a much more viable explanation and is supported by biblical scripture, many will hastily dismiss the notion as far-fetched because it doesn't fit the theological parameters of their religious institution. But until another theory can be definitively proven, the prospect of angelic influence is clearly worthy of comparable consideration.

Ancient Monolithic Structures

In the 2nd century AD, the powerful Roman Emperor Hadrian ordered the construction of his luxurious 300-acre palace in Tivoli. Although his Villa is recognized as an incredible feat of engineering, the marvelous palace pales in comparison to the pyramids of Egypt. In the 4th century BC, Alexander the Great, the ancient Macedonian king and one of history's most successful military commanders, commissioned the construction of the Palace of Aigai (15,000 sq. meters). At that time, this lavish palace in Vergina was considered the largest building in classical Greece. While these powerful individuals lived luxurious lifestyles and may have sought to be perceived as gods in their lifetimes, they clearly were not.

We also consider the accomplishments of Genghis Khan who was born in 1162 and rose to power in 1206 to found the vast Mongolian Empire. By 1227, it was the largest contiguous land empire in history, covered approximately 12.5 million square miles, and accounted for more than 20% of the world's land. Utilizing well trained horse-mounted armies, he subjugated the Western Xia empire, destroyed the Jin Dynasty in northern China, and conquered the Khwarazmian Empire in Central Asia. His empire encompassed the land from Eastern Europe to the Sea of Japan and from Siberia to North Africa. Even after all his remarkable conquests, Kahn was not considered a god, and he never commissioned the construction of a lavish monolithic palace.

Kahn was a brutal warlord who conquered more countries than any other king in history, but his relatively simple palace only consisted of a square, tent-like structure with wooden columns, some white porcelain, and floor tiles with swastika-like patterns. It wasn't until 2008 that the infamous stainless steel equestrian statue was erected in Tsonjin Boldog as a monumental tribute to Genghis Khan. Structures like the equestrian statue serve as a profound indication of what modern man considers a fitting memorial for such significant historical figures. We note that Kahn's monument only stands 130 feet tall and sits on a 10-meter tall visitor center complex. There are also numerous statues and monuments in Washington D.C. that commemorate some of America's most influential leaders.

Many of the world's wealthiest people have built phenomenal palaces and some rather lavish estates, but they pale in comparison to ancient structures like the pyramids. It is relatively easy for modern man to imagine the king of an ancient society managing to amass a horde of precious metals, flaunting elaborate gowns and headdresses, and being adorned in an assortment of unique jewelry. Since it is considered virtually impossible for thousands of ancient rulers to have simultaneously chosen to construct so many elaborate monolithic stone structures, the likelihood of some sort of ironic coincidence can be completely ruled out.

Today, using a variety of new technologies like LIDAR (Light Detection and Ranging), even more ancient structures are being discovered each year. The temples, tombs, and pyramids of Egypt were supposedly built to honor the godlike pharaohs or to serve as an elaborate vessel designed to propel them into their version of a perilous afterlife. It is doubtful that a typical human being could somehow manage to achieve the status of Egyptian Pharoah. Unless they had some sort of godlike connection, a normal person couldn't possibly have developed the advanced engineering skills required to construct such intricate monolithic marvels. If a collection of such structures was only found in Egypt, we could conceivably extend credit for an astonishing achievement by one stunningly amazing civilization. If two or three other civilizations managed to accomplish such a feat, perhaps we could consider it an extremely rare coincidence as well. However, since thousands of similar structures were simultaneously erected on every continent of the planet, we simply cannot attribute so many structures to any variation of an ironic coincidence.

Anthropologists contend that humanity 4500 years ago consisted of relatively small communities of simple hunters and gatherers. Based on that genuine scientific declaration, it is safe to assume that very few humans, if any, could have developed the engineering knowhow and construction skills necessary to erect such structures. In 2500 BC, mankind supposedly had no written language or the ability to generate blueprints, and the wheel hadn't even been invented yet. Based on the existing archaeological evidence, someone somewhere seems to be missing something. Contemporary engineers today would be hard pressed to find a metropolis with enough qualified brick masons proficient enough to manipulate solid granite stone, even if they had untethered access to contemporary tools and equipment. Our ancient ancestors supposedly created these massive structures using wooden hammers and copper chisels. We require an explanation for how such engineering feats in antiquity may have been accomplished, but our scientific community has yet to provide one.

That intriguing fact begs the question: How could simple hunters and gatherers possibly have accomplished such astonishing feats without the benefit of outside assistance? Mainstream anthropologists would have us believe that groups of unskilled people in communities throughout the world somehow, simultaneously, and rather suddenly, managed to develop the advanced technology and skills necessary to build such megalithic structures above and below ground. Ancient astronaut theorists contend that advanced knowledge was provided to select human beings by some other worldly source. We agree but adamantly contend that it is doubtful the source was aliens from another planet.

Even if the ancient labor forces that built those structures consisted of sufficiently compensated workers or a significant number of disheartened slaves, a few questions remain unanswered. Why on earth would so many ancient civilizations in so many locations choose to build structures of such astonishing magnitudes? Why were these phenomenal structures built out of the heaviest and most difficult material in the world? Unless those ancient rulers truly had some sort of genuine godlike stature, it makes no sense whatsoever and defies understanding. How did these ancient rulers manage to convince the inhabitants of an entire civilization to comply with such ludicrous decrees?

If the necessary knowledge wasn't conveyed to humanity by aliens from another planet, the only other viable theory, which coincidentally happens to be consistent with biblical scripture, is the likelihood of direct and/or indirect influence by angels. If angels are indeed real, there are in essence only two categories to consider: God's heavenly angels and Satan's evil angels. Both have similar capabilities and undoubtedly played key roles in the development of mankind's technology.

It is estimated that tens of billions of demonic entities saturate our global society. The overall intent of the fallen angels is to help Satan achieve his ultimate objective. So, they could easily have provided ancient man with the necessary technology and knowhow. Our conjectures are of course based on a theoretical notion, but if ancient people were in fact equipped by demonic angels posing as gods, even a community of simple hunters and gatherers could conceivably have constructed the vast array of magnificent ancient structures that still exist today.

When one considers God's plan, the involvement of Satan's angels not only explains how but also why so many monolithic and pyramidic structures might have been erected. Demonic angels would undoubtedly have had both the cosmological motive and the means to serve in that capacity. The prospect of Satan's angels operating in a godlike capacity is also consistent with biblical scripture.

Since most of these structures were built to absolute perfection, some form of peculiar guidance must have been imparted. No one can say for certain, but it is quite possible that the reason these mysterious structures were constructed of such massive stones may have been to ensure that they would last for thousands of years, and to serve as monumental evidence of their other worldly involvement in ancient times.

Satan and the Church

Globally, there are an estimated 45,000 Christian denominations and about two hundred in the United States. Those are some rather alarming figures. Since most church goers develop their biblical understanding based on weekly sermons and a series of bible studies, choosing the wrong religion can be monumentally detrimental. Satan and his army of deceptive angels have been infiltrating our religious institutions and modifying their beliefs for centuries. While they may appear to be genuine, there will be many false prophets and teachers in the Last Days, and some will be standing at the pulpit of many churches. So, the Body of Christ should not hastily assume that all its religious leaders are preaching the same genuine gospel, and we can no longer consider every local church a haven for biblical truth.

The Holy Bible was clearly written for all mankind. It was not intended to be interpreted solely by canonical scholars and intuitive theologians. We therefore encourage everyone to enhance their biblical insight by reading the Bible daily and listening to a variety of theological experts, not just one. It seems that God's plan for His eternal kingdom and Satan's objective are not being fully explored by many of today's religions. Whether it is intentional or inadvertent, many seem to be overlooking or avoiding some biblical facts. Today, more than ever, it is imperative that Christians TEST what they are being taught. If a sermon deviates from the truth or a church's doctrines aren't consistent with biblical scripture, we recommend finding another church to attend. The opportunity to experience eternal life may depend on it!

When considered in proper perspective, Earth itself is nothing more than one miniscule particle of cosmological dust. As the Bible tells us, all the nations of Earth are as a drop of a bucket and are counted as the small dust of the balance. What earthly dust is to mankind, humans are to God. Mankind arrogantly believes it is "special", but while His love for all mankind is immense and untethered, humanity is in fact considered insignificant on a cosmological scale. Since all pain and suffering will cease to exist, we don't expect a loving God to torment non-believers in "hell" forever and ever, but most of humanity is expected to experience what the Bible refers to as the second death, and they will cease to exist for the balance of eternity. Since scientists have estimated that the universe will most likely exist for hundreds of trillions of years, the wrong choice in this world is perceived as the ultimate eternal sacrifice.

Clearly, mankind's approach to a peaceful existence isn't working. The only chance humanity has to thrive peacefully in an earthly world absorbed by evil is for mankind to live according to the Ten Commandments and the biblical teachings of Jesus Christ. Regardless of a person's beliefs, only those whose names are written in The Lamb's Book of Life will be entitled to a god-like existence for the balance of eternity. Compared to a lavish life on Earth, God's heavenly reward will drastically exceed the most vivid imagination of any human being. We encourage all to imagine that!

Many ancient astronaut theorists claim to believe in God and often reference select aspects of biblical scripture, but it is typically taken out of context. If visitors from another planet were incorrectly perceived as heavenly angels, we suspect the Bible would have depicted them as something other than messengers of God. Satan's angels are celestial as well, but they deliver an entirely different message to mankind. Since their arrival, they have been deceptively influencing humanity. If they did in fact establish an earthly presence and ruled over numerous civilizations as gods, they most certainly would have asserted their supreme influential dominance to assist Satan in achieving his goals. Because bible-believers hinder his objectives, the Christian community is targeted by Satan's demonic forces and even the most elite believers are easily deceived by Satan.

Angel enthusiasts don't seek to win some meaningless controversial debate between the Church and our friends in the scientific community. Our objective is to ensure that as many souls as possible receive the most fabulous gift in the history of the universe and there is only one way to reach the eternal Kingdom of Heaven. That is purely through the merciful grace of Jesus Christ. Those who don't choose to accept Him as their Lord and Savior and to live their lives according to His Word, are not permitted to enter. Since God's infinite universe has more than enough room for every human being on the planet, we encourage all of mankind to choose their path carefully.
